HOW SOULS CHANGE THEIR HABITATION

The Lecturer Answers Many Difficult Questions and Some Very Odd Ones.

"A man who is a liar on earth is no more capable of telling the truth after he dies than when his soul inhabited the flesh," said Thomas Prime, the visiting theosophist, last night, in answer to a question propounded at Arion hall. Mr. Prime's novel answer was given while discussing a question regarding his ideas of spiritualism. "You ask at a seance through the medium, if reincarnation is true, and often the answer comes back, 'No.' Why is this? It is because the persons asked were those people on earth who had no great intelligence, and the fact is that they really don't know."

Mr. Prime went on to say that were this question asked in India, where the development of the higher planes of consciousness is carried to the highest possible state of perfection, the answer would in all probability be 'Yes,' because they would surely be in a position to know. Both the question and Mr. Prime's method of answering were unique, but as usual, the lecturer was equal to the occasion.

It was question night at Arion hall, and Mr. Prime set himself to the arduous task of answering posers off hand as they were brought to him written on small slips of paper. The hour spent in answering the questions was interesting to the audience, and much food for thought was given them. One of the first questions answered was the following:

Can a reiterated and persistent thought be conveyed to a far distant person, no other means of conveyance being available? The lecturer answered in the affirmative, although with the proviso that all persons could not do this. Transference of thought was quite easy to those whose mental planes were as real to them as the physical planes were to others. The soul of a thought is the will power. If one is not in the habit of thinking intensely, but only of rapidly running over a great many matters, then such a form of thought would be very vague. If one was to think intensely what he wanted to convey to another person, just so in proportion will the thought go to that person. Thoughts, like things, go wherever one sends them. It is not only dependent upon the man who thinks them, but it also depends upon the sensitiveness of the person to whom one sends the thoughts. Like a flash of lightning, a person can send a thought to a person, and it is probably the influence of a thought sent out by some one else.

Another questioner wanted to know, accepting the doctrine of reincarnation as undoubted, if reincarnation followed in succession the same line of sexes. Mr. Prime answered in the negative. The qualities known as courage, and endurance, are sometimes better acquired in the male sex, while love and sentiment are more easily acquired in the experience of the women. The soul is neither male nor female, but the bodies that inhabit the earth are both. Souls which formerly inhabited women's bodies go into those of men and vice versa. It is not a case of once a man always a man. The soul gains a series of experiences in one sex and then in another.

What is sleep? was another question. The lecturer answered that it was the temporary losing of consciousness. The physical bodies are capable of a certain amount of work and the body then requires rest. The soul is never fatigued, nor does the mental body become tired. The soul never loses consciousness, but it is the physical body which is deprived of it temporarily. When a man wakes up he regains his consciousness, much as he does his clothes.

Do theosophists believe in spiritualism? he was asked. Some do and others do not, he answered. There is no creed in theosophy. Any man of any creed can join the theosophists and not give up his creed. The lecturer said theosophists all believed they were sons of God, steadily making progress. Spiritualism was simply one form of a man's creed, a kind of scientific experiment. He thought theism had done a great deal of good, in that it had proven that there is a continuation of life after death, but on the other hand it had done a great deal of harm.

Don't you think it is better for many people who have been satisfied with the old faiths of the churches, to be satisfied with them still and not take up new ones? This was a poser for the lecturer. Mr. Prime thought that if there were some points of faith that a man was not satisfied with that disturbed him, such as that he has always heard that God is a jealous God, and later hears that God is love, he would be a fool if he did not try to find out about it, and a wise man if he did.

His answer to a query as to what constituted sin was, "to do what you know is wrong—that's all; nothing more."

Speaking of reincarnation and of the statements by many that while conversing with some one they feel that they have known him somewhere else, Mr. Prime said that this was probably a case of two souls which had had an introduction in former incarnations.

anything to say as to your government. The delegates from other Territories find that their people work through them, but the merchants and others work against the delegate.

"There has been much criticism of the bills I introduced for the federal control of lepers. The Board of Health is feeding the lepers rotten salmon and all kinds of bad food, and they know that if the Federal government takes the control of the settlement there will be no chance to divide the $250,000 appropriated for the lepers. They are now inoculating the children with leprosy germs under the guise of vaccination, for the purpose of keeping the settlement full and there is no telling where it will end. If the national government takes the settlement there will be no more of this."

"I am criticised for the advocacy of the Pain bill. If there is no competition when Pain's franchise runs out, the Rapid Transit Company will put on cars for the haoles and the natives, just as there are cars for the whites and the blacks in the States. Pain was always with the people. He was opposed to the overthrow of the monarchy, and is still opposed to the people who did it. There must be competition if we want the best service. I am going to go before the commission of senators and tell them what the people want, and you may be sure you will get it." There was an attempt to get cheers but there were as many groans, and the people quietly dispersed.

Scientists Discover Possible Contemporary of Romulus and Remus.

ROME, July 22.—In the primitive necropolis, close to the temple of Antonius and Faustina, in the Roman Forum, has now been discovered a tomb for interment, hard by the cremating tomb brought to light last April.

The tomb is of red tuffstone, and contains three terra cotta vases, and a skull is also visible.

The anthropological characteristics of the Romans of Romulus' day will thus no longer remain a secret.
